D was named after his father. Someday down the road, just like his dad, he plans to take over the family business and start a family of his own. There's only one problem with that plan, though. He can't seem to find the right girl. That's where Sparks comes in—playing matchmaker and “helping” him every step of the way.

Things are never as they seem with Sparks, and D learns that lesson even more than any of his roommates. In the past, when Sparks was playing the role of matchmaker with D's roommates, Sparks was careful to keep his personal life private, but all of that is about to change. When things spin out of control, will D still be able to find his perfect match? When Sparks' personal life intertwines with their own, will D and his roommates finally understand why Sparks is so eager to help?
