Compression Anastomosis by Biofragmentable Rings: Proceedings of the Second European Workshop

Biofragmentable anastomoses rings represent a fascinating concept: Standardization of anastomoses, secure technique in application, expulsion of the material without residuals. In addition, one single technique allows to perform the classical end to end, end to side, and side to side anastomoses in most areas of the gastrointestinal tract, without any auxiliary tool. This means a great advantage of practicability. Controlled studies evidenced that the rate of complications is very small for the intestinal tract. Therefore, it is important to establish the localization for present indication and contra indications. Two chapters especially deal with upper GI anastomoses including esophagus anastomoses and with BAR anastomoses in inflammatory bowel disease. This is done by analysing the data and by an exchange of experience between the clinical research groups. This book is to communicate experimental data and to increase understanding about pathophysiology of the healing of anastomoses by means of compression anastomoses. Würzburg, Germany, Prof. Dr. R.
