This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1900 edition. Excerpt: ...will gladly publish anything you have to say 011 the subject." And so on, in an endless chain. I F telegraph wires could feel the weight of the mes During breakfast it was Campbell's habit to read, before their classification by his secretary, both the newspapers and such despatches as might have arrived. The moment he entered the room and took his seat at the table, he saw that something extraordinary had happened. There was such a stack of despatches that it seemed hopeless to attack them. They were still falling like snow-flakes. A glance at two or three was sufficient to show that the issue of the New York Herald that morning must contain something of a very striking character. As soon as the paper arrived, he called for it and examined it with eagerness. The very first page, usually devoted to advertisements, was taken up with a blazing article in double-lead type, with the most striking phrases printed here and there in red and blue colors. The heading took up about half the page-, and the first line was printed in red letters an inch high: THE SECRET OUT 1 What Archibald the Great has been doing and thinking! What he is going to do! The armies of the world to be swept from the earth! The navies to be sunk! The United States of the World to be organized! King Archibald the First to assume the reins of Universal Government! Full account of his plans from our special correspondent! This was the prelude to a despatch from " our correspondent " at Campbelltown. It was a paper such as no one but a Herald reporter could write. The phrases in red or blue were in type twice as large as the pica of the rest of the article. Glancing down the page at them, such expressions as these caught the eye: "...
