Malina Ugalik is sick of her isolated hometown. In Arviat, Nunavut, days are unbelievably long and boring. Malina craves adventure and is determined to move South one day and experience the luxuries of a bigger city. After spending so many years butting heads with her alcoholic father and careless brother, Malina is ready for something bigger.

One day, Malina's father and brother come home from a winter hunt with a slain polar bear. Just when the villagers are about to skin the bear, it comes back to life and starts running away. When the villagers start chasing after it with their rifles, they end up shooting down a naked man.

When the strange man wakes up in the hospital, he's lost all his memories. He doesn't know his name, his past, or what he's doing in Arviat. One thing is for certain: he doesn't belong there. His eyes are too icy blue, his hair, too blond. Gossips around town think the man might be a shapeshifting bear god. Malina is inclined to believe them.

Who is this mystery man? And what does he want? One thing is for certain – he's the most attractive and funny man Malina's ever met. But she'll need to rein in her secret desire and helpless infatuation in order to help her new friend get back on his feet.

Malina and the man (who she affectionately nicknames 'Anik') must journey across Arviat to find out the truth about the man's past. They will face many unexpected roadblocks along the way...the biggest one being: who or what is Anik?

“The Polar Bear's Identity” is the first instalment of Sapphire Keyes' “Polar Shifters Series”.
